Industry Expert At Marquet International To Give Series Of Lectures On Ethics In Corporate Investigations, Due Diligence & Litigation Support

Boston – October 10, 2006 – Marquet International Ltd. announced today it will host a series of educational lectures this Fall on the ethics and legal restrictions on conducting corporate investigations. This series follows the ongoing scandal involving Hewlett Packard's botched internal investigation of leaks from its Board of Directors. Christopher T. Marquet, a 23-year veteran investigative expert, will present to corporate inside counsel, outside counsel and litigators, directors, compliance executives and other corporate executives on this important topic.

The lecture series will initially be held in five Northeastern cities: Boston, New York, Stamford, Connecticut, Hartford and Providence, Rhode Island. Mr. Marquet's presentation will cover the following issues and more:

- When To Investigate
- Case Studies In Investigative No No's
- Managing Investigations
- Privacy Restrictions & Ethical Issues
- Other Legal & Regulatory Constraints
- The Limits Of Investigative Tools: Public Records; Interviews; Surveillance; Pretexts; Forensic Accounting; "Dumpster Diving"; Computer Forensics; Sting Operations; "Confidential sources"; Monitoring and other tools

“The scandal that has enveloped Hewlett Packard in the wake of its internal investigation gone awry is a text-book case in how not to conduct an internal investigation. Nevertheless, such investigations are a necessary tool in today's business world and corporate executives and their advisors need to know where the limits are and how to conduct effective and appropriate corporate investigations.” According to Christopher T. Marquet, who will be giving the lectures.
